Editor's Message

Randy W. Whited

Sometimes we all hit an impasse in our efforts, whether it is tracking an elusive ancestor, locating a missing record, or, in my case, writing the editorial to the AGS Quarterly. In each case, it is often useful to take a step back, clear one's mind of the roadblocks, and then tackle anew from a fresh viewpoint.

This is one of the great benefits of being a member of a genealogical society; the chance to develop ideas and skills to tackle difficult questions in new ways. It also presents opportunities for one to learn from guest lecturers, seminar speakers and experienced, helpful peers. This spirit of sharing is what holds a society together.

This spirit was realized in Tommy Ingram, former President of AGS. His obituary can be found on the following page. Through his encouragement, I became more involved in AGS during his time as Chair of the Education Committee. In some small way, I feel that I am passing forward the assistance and enthusiasm he shared in our community.

That being said, I trust everyone can find something of personal value in this Quarterly, the first of the 50th year of publication. Inside is a mix of local records extracts, upcoming event notices, and personal research and memoirs. Perhaps you will find something that will inspire you to put pen to paper (or fingers to keyboard) and share with your Society and peers.

Sincerely,

In Memoriam

Tommy Ingram

Tommy Ingram, 53, long time resident of Austin, Texas passed away February 24, 2009 due to AIDS related illness. Born June 8, 1955 in Odessa to Quinville and Isabel Mayfield Ingram, Tommy came to Austin in the mid 1970's to study music at the University of Texas. He later worked in the restaurant and convenience store industries before finding his true calling in the printing and desk-top publishing business. He was the long-term manager of Hallmark Printing, before completing his career at Ginny's Printing. Tommy had a knack for using words and for working with people. He found his passion in classical music, raising roses and studying his genealogical roots.

Tommy was a former President of the Austin Genealogical Society. He began the researcher assistance programs of "Help Desk", "Dear Genie" and brickwall Saturdays. Tommy attended the beginner education classes faithfully to share his knowledge with those beginning their research.

Tommy was preceded in death by his parents. He is survived by his two half-sisters, and many cousins, especially Richard Foster of Austin.

A celebration of Tommy's life will be held at 1:00 p.m. on March 14, 2009 at Metropolitan Community Church of Austin, 8601 South 1st Street, Austin, TX. His ashes will be buried in the Ingram family cemetery outside of Cisco, TX at a later date.

Tommy's family and friends wish to thank the wonderful staff and volunteers of Doug's House and Hospice Austin who took such loving care of Tommy during the last month of his life. In lieu of flowers, they request that donations be made in Tommy's memory to Doug's House/Project Transitions, PO Box 4826, Austin, TX 78765 or OutYouth Austin, 909 E. 49 1/2 Street, Austin, TX 78751.

The Ruthstrom Family Musicians

Richard Robertson, AGS Member

Since David Ruthstrom officially became my son-in-law, I have now put him in the family tree, included him in Pedigree, Descendancy, and Ascendancy charts, and collected his family stories. Although he has unofficially been a member of the family for over twenty years, he didn't become "official" until 2003 when he and daughter, Jeannie, exchanged wedding vows. Added to the unique wedding situation, Jeannie was the fifth family member to wear the 1947 wedding dress. That is another story which my wife, Marian, has written.

David has been a musician all of his adult life. He has a beautiful bass-baritone voice and plays a mean 12 string guitar. He and Jeannie have been a musical team for over twenty years, performing all over the lower forty-eight and Alaska. Having gone out on his own at an early age, David knew very little about his family history. In 1991 he and Jeannie went to his hometown of Houston to visit a couple of great uncles, Woody and Walter, who live next door to each other. To David and Jeannie's great surprise they saw pictures of the Ruthstrom Family Band in Walter's home. David had never heard of the Ruthstrom Family Band!!! Next door, Uncle Woody, who had just been released from the hospital, took out his accordion and entertained them. David was unaware of these musicians in his family. He was participating in a "Ruthstrom Musician's Homecoming"!! The uncles pulled out some old newspaper clippings and told them the story of the Ruthstrom Family Band.

What we learned from that visit and some oral history from his dad has had us all intrigued and amazed. David's great grandfather, John L. Ruthstrom, was born August 27, 1879 in Sweden. He was a locomotive engineer by profession and a musician by instinct. He married

Signe Bernadina who ran a hotel for Swedish Army officers. During World War I times were tough in Sweden and the family decided to come to America for better opportunities. In 1917 or 1918 John left their home in Kiruna, Sweden near the Arctic Circle, settling in Schenectady, N.Y. Later he sent for Mrs. Ruthstrom and their six sons, Bruno, Allen, Gunnar, Sven, Phillip, and Paul. Three other sons, Woodrow, Ralph, and Walter, were born in America. Bruno, the oldest, was David's grandfather.

According to one newspaper clipping "Pop" Ruthstrom began "breaking in" the boys to perform on various instruments from the moment they were big enough to straddle a piano bench and lift a trombone. He did not launch a family band to earn a living until the lack of other jobs forced him into it. David's grandfather, Bruno, disobeyed his father and sneaked into the Bijou Theater in Springfield, Mass. to see a vaudeville act. He saw the manager, who was a fan of the band, and in turn persuaded "Pop" Ruthstrom to turn professional. That's how they got into show business.

At first the Ruthstrom Family Band was composed of "Pop" and his eight sons. By 1927 they were advertised as the father and nine sons, billing the last born, two year old Walter, as the director. One flyer said "See and hear the youngest director/Two Years Old/ From the land of the midnight sun." The band traveled over most of the United States on the old Keith-Orpheum Vaudeville Circuit. And they also played circuses including Barnum and Bailey. According to David's dad, Omar, whose adopted name came from Omar the Tent Man of Barnum and Bailey, the Conn instrument company was so interested in the band that they donated all of the brass instruments. "Pop" played either the Sousaphone or the piano, one boy played snare drum, another the bass drum, and all the rest trumpets, french horn, trombone, and baritone. Uncle Woody gave David one picture of the band that included "Mama Inge" holding Walter in her lap.

A copy of an old 1930 program from River Vale, N.J. reveals the variety of music the band offered. Here are samples: Song of Songs by Irving Berlin, Swedish Melody, The World is Waiting for a Sunrise, Swedish Guard March, Lucky Lindy, The Blue Bells of Scotland, and Stars and Stripes Forever by John Phillip Sousa.

When "Mama" Ruthstrom was interviewed in Houston at the age of 66, she told of some of the wonderful people she met in show business. The Ruthstroms knew Edgar Bergen when he wasn't so famous. He used to have coffee with them in their dressing room and "shoot the bull," she said. He had only one suit and was scared stiff that something would happen to it so he wouldn't be able to go on with his act. When King Gustav VI of Sweden was the Crown Prince, the band welcomed him at the Springfield train station with the Swedish National Anthem. He was so excited that he jumped into the middle of the boys and started clapping four year old Walter's hands. Then he asked for an autographed picture of the band.

The Ruthstrom Family band broke up in Houston sometime around 1930. According to David's father, Omar, they played a gig and the promoters failed to pay them. It was the beginning of the Depression and money was hard to come by. Mama Ruthstrom said "there was no more money and the boys kept growing out of their clothes so Pop just opened a mechanical shop here."

Not only has David been fascinated by the revelation of his roots; our whole family has been eager to learn more about this musical family. We taped father Omar for two hours and have been promised access to a lot of the bread and butter statistics of genealogists. So in addition to a great family story, I will be able to complete some of those neat Pedigree, Descendancy, and Ascendancy charts. And how could we have ever anticipated that our daughter would marry into a family with such an unusual history of providing her genealogy-oriented father with such a golden opportunity.

The Community of Decker

Extracted from Swedes In Texas In Words and Pictures, English Translation, 1838 - 1918

This community is located about eight miles east of Austin on a rolling plain cut through by the little and big Decker creeks, from which the community has gotten its name. The actual name of the prairie was McElroy League.

The first settlers in the area were Swedes, who moved there in the 1870's at the same time as New Sweden was founded. Cultivation was perhaps more difficult here than in other areas, partly because the forest had been cut down and the land was filled with tree-stumps and shrubs. Nothing could deter these people from Småland, however; the howl of the wolf, the cry of the owl, the rattle of the rattlesnake, tree-stumps and rocks, it was all the same to them, they all had to be cleared. A stranger who comes to this area today and sees the well-tended farms and attractive homes can hardly guess at the toil of the first settlers. You can now travel on wide graveled roads in six-cylinder automobiles at a speed of forty miles per hour, where fifty years ago an ox-cart was the mode of transportation, and the roads were 'cow-trails'.

Among the first Swedes to buy land here in the 70's were Oscar Monson, who built the first settler home, Gustaf Lundell, F. G. Swenson, John Lundell, Claus Lundell, J. A. Skylt, J. Alexius Johnson, August Ekdahl, Olaus Nelson and Ljungren. In the 80's, the settlement went faster, and the community grew in all directions.

Because of the proximity to the capital, the inhabitants of Decker have become involved before others in political battles in Travis County. They have been prominent in the temperance movement, which in later years has played such an important role in the state. At the latest election, when Travis County became a 'dry county', every vote from Decker was on the side of prohibition. The first Swedish cotton gin in Decker was built by Claus and John Lundell, an installation that still serves its purpose in the community.

Religious work is carried out by the Methodist Church and the Free Church, which both have their own building.

Swedish Methodist Church.

It soon became evident that Decker was to become the main Swedish community since many started to purchase land there; and they chose to build a church here which was dedicated on Whitsunday, 1879. The area, a beautiful knoll in the middle of the settlement, is located ten miles from Austin and five miles from Manor. One acre was originally donated to the congregation for the building of a church, but later they purchased the neighboring nine acres which the church still owns. Next to the church, a cemetery and parsonage was built in 1884. P. A. Lundberg was the first leader of the congregation. The first buildings became too small and insufficient and had to give room for newer and more up-to-date accommodations. The congregation's present, beautiful church Decker was built in 1881.

Postscript:

The other church in the community was the Swedish Evangelical Free Church. The listing of the cemetery of that church was listed in a previous issue of this publication.

In 2009, Decker is in the Austin city limits and the new Decker Elementary School is part of the expanding Manor School District. Decker Lake covers many of the old Swedish homesteads.

PIONEER FAMILIES OF TRAVIS COUNTY

Austin Genealogical Society will issue a pioneer certificate to those who can prove their ancestors lived in Travis County, Texas, prior to the close of 1880. To qualify for the certificate, you must be a direct descendant of people who lived here on or before Dec. 31, 1880, proved with birth, death and marriage certificates; probate, census and military records; and obituaries and Bible records.

Applications for Pioneer Families of Travis County can be found at www.AusTxGenSoc.org or from Kay Dunlap Boyd, P.O. Box 10010, Austin, Texas 78766-1010.

Each application is $20 and the certificates make nice gifts.

You don't have to be a Travis County resident or a member of Austin Genealogical Society – although membership in the society is another fine bargain at $20 a year.

Decker Methodist Church Cemetery

Kay Dunlap Boyd

As part of AGS' ongoing inventory of Travis County cemeteries, Decker Methodist Church Cemetery was surveyed on 9 October 2008 by Kay Dunlap Boyd. The cemetery is located at 8304 Decker Lane, between the elementary school and the church. The cemetery is fenced and in good repair. This inventory contains surveyor's notes in parenthesis and is divided into three sections: south, north and west. Additional cemeteries can be found on the AGS Cemetery Project web page at www.austintxgensoc.org/cemeteries.

Federation of Genealogical Societies 2009 Annual Conference

Be a part of an exciting, educational, inspiring, & historic genealogy conference!

2-5 September 2009

Little Rock, Arkansas

The Federation of Genealogical Societies invites you to its annual Conference for the Nation's Genealogists. Our 2009 host, the Arkansas Genealogical Society joins FGS in welcoming you to Little Rock as we celebrate "Passages Through Time."

Why should you make plans to be there?

- More than 160 educational presentations with well-known speakers from all over the U.S.
- Lectures that appeal to beginning, intermediate and experienced genealogists
- Sessions for professional genealogists
- A large exhibit hall with exhibitors and vendors
- Vendors loaded with genealogy and history books, magazines, databases, software, maps, CDs, magazines, journals, and more
- The host hotels, the Peabody and the DoubleTree Hotel, are wonderful
- The Statehouse Convention Center is connected to the Peabody Little Rock
- Shopping, historic sites, libraries, and more in the city
- Daily meal functions with exciting speakers and time for networking
- It's easy to drive to Little Rock on several highways and Interstates
- AND You save $50.00 off the full registration price if you register by June 2, 2009

Outline History of Austin

Judge George H. Gray,

George H. Gray, Jr., lawyer and clerk of the Texas Supreme Court, was born in 1828, in Virginia. He moved to Austin in 1849 and was admitted to the Texas bar. He was elected chief justice of Travis County in 1858. A Unionist, Gray decided in 1862 to move to New Orleans, where he remained until the end of the Civil War. In October 1865 his brother-in-law, Andrew J. Hamilton, appointed him clerk of the Texas Supreme Court. Gray served until October 1867, when in spite of his Unionist sympathies, he was removed from office as a hindrance to Reconstruction. He resumed private practice in Austin. Gray was elected Austin city attorney in 1872. After the organization of Kimble County in 1876, he practiced for several years at Junction. In 1881, because of his declining health, he moved to his daughter's home in Austin, where he died on November 5, 1891. – Handbook of Texas.

The following was written in 1872 as part of the introduction to the first Austin city directory.

From the declaration of the independence of the Republic of Texas, on the second day of March 1836, to January 1839, no effort had been made to permanently locate the seat of government. The city of Houston was temporarily the capital, and had every disposition to remain so, but its location not being deemed suitable, nor calculated in any degree to encourage the settlement of the extensive frontier, nor to give that protection to the families in the interior that was required to induce an early settlement of the country, its removal was determined on, and under the administration of President Lamar the Congress of the Republic passed an act on the ___ day of January, 1839, providing for the election of five commissioners, whose duty it was to select a site for the location of the seat of government—between the Trinity and Colorado rivers and above the old San Antonio road. They were required to select not less than one nor more than four leagues of land, either out of the public domain, by individual donation, or by purchase at a price not to exceed three dollars per acre. They were further required to enter into a bond of one hundred thousand dollars for the faithful performance of the duties required of them, and to take an oath that they would keep secret all their proceedings, and further, that they would neither directly nor indirectly, by agent or otherwise, purchase nor contract for any lands in the Republic from the date of their oath until the termination of their duties, and they were required to report within three months from the time of their appointment. The act also provided for the appointment of an agent, whose duty it was to have six hundred and forty acres of land selected laid out in town lots for the capitol, arsenal, university and all necessary public buildings, and after ninety days publication of time and place, to sell not exceeding one-half of the lots thus laid out, at public outcry, the agent himself not being permitted to purchase more than six lots in the new city. The act also provided “that the name of said site shall be the city of Austin.”

Under the act, A. C. Horton, J. W. Burton, William Menifee, Isaac Campbell and Louis P. Cooke were selected as commissioners, and immediately entered upon the arduous and responsible duties imposed upon them. Their position was no ordinary one, and by no means an enviable one. They, however, were equal to the emergency. Having been selected from different portions of the county, it was naturally expected that they would have their sectional feeling, and with a patriotic devotion to the best interests of their adopted country, and an eye single to the future welfare and prosperity of their young Republic, they selected the little village of Waterloo, purchased from the owners the land necessary, and made their report to the President.

Immediately upon the reception of the report of the commissioner the President appointed Judge Edwin Waller (who is now living, and a prominent and respected citizen of Austin county) the agent provided for in the act referred to, who, with a corps of surveyors, proceeded to the site selected and immediately commenced operations.

He found the then town of Waterloo, but future capital of the growing Republic, to consist of but three families, and the rival town of Montopolis, about two miles below, to consist of (as the writer is informed) but two families. It is reported that Montopolis insisted very strongly on being selected, and quite a jealousy grew up between the towns, but all differences were amicably settled on the first Indian raid, which happened in a very short time. Judge Waller entered vigorously upon the duties required of him, and on the first day of August 1839, he made the first sale of lots. Three hundred and six lots were sold at the aggregate sum of $189,588, ranging in price from $120 to $2,800. Lot No. 1 in Block 42 and Lot No. 6 in Block 55 (being the lot on which the banking house of Raymond & Whitis now stands) were then regarded as the most valuable lots in the city. Before the sale, however, the city had commenced rapidly to fill up with good, staunch and hardy citizens, and by the time it took place, many houses had been erected, by parties who were willing thus to build and risk their chances of purchasing the lots on which they had built, at the sale.

The erection of public as well as private buildings rapidly progressed, and on the 17th day of October, 1839, President Lamar, with a portion of his cabinet, arrived in Austin. This was a day of great rejoicing among the citizens. The President was met a few miles from the city by a large procession, headed by Gen. A. Sidney Johnson (who was then Secretary of War, but had preceded the President) and Gen. Edward Burleson. Judge Waller had been elected by the citizens to receive the President.

The procession conducted the President and his party into the city, where they partook of a most sumptuous dinner prepared at the Bullock House (now known as "Cook's Corner"). Among the distinguished guests present were Gen. A. Sidney Johnson, Secretary of War; Hon. I. P. Cooke, Secretary of Navy; Hon. James H. Starr, Secretary of Treasury; Hon. A. Brigham, Treasurer; Gen. Edward Burleson and many others.

The arrival of the President and his party gave renewed confidence to the people; emigrants were flocking to the new city, and buildings were rapidly going up in every direction. In the latter part of October, 1839, the Austin City Gazette was established by Sam Whiting, and shortly afterwards another paper, called the Sentinel, was also established, and judging from the tone of them they had their jealousies, just the same as the papers of the present day. They were both lively papers, and conducted with marked ability, and from their many advertisements it would be inferred that both were prospering. About his time a reading room was established by Mr. James Burke, but unfortunately was shortly afterwards destroyed by fire. The young gentlemen of the city had established a lyceum, and that sterling old citizen, Dr. S. G. Haynie, was advertised to deliver a course of lectures on phrenology. Once in a while an Indian raid would be noticed, but apparently little attention was paid to it. One was made on the thirteenth day of March, 1840, and killed two men inside of the city limits, and stole all of the horses and mules that were not securely stabled. The Indians were followed but not overtaken, and in a short time the affair was doubtless forgotten. Lot sales would take place from time to time by the government, to meet the requirement of the citizens, and now the State owns but very few if any lots except those occupied by or intended for public buildings.

On the eleventh of November, 1839, the first session of the Fourth Congress met at the new capital, and in a very short time commenced agitating the question of a removal of the seat of government, and finally a bill was introduced to leave the subject of removal to the people, which was very promptly voted down, notwithstanding it was zealously supported by Gen. Houston, who was then a member of the Congress from San Augustine county.

Early in January, 1840, Mr. Amos Roark found the census of the city to be as follows: "Seventy-five families, population eight hundred and fifty-six, of which seven hundred and eleven were whites and one hundred and forty-five blacks—five hundred and fifty grown men, sixty-one ladies, one hundred children, seventy-seven of which are large enough to go to school; seventy-three professors of religion—seventeen Methodists, twelve Presbyterians, five Cumberland Presbyterians, eleven Episcopalians, ten Baptists and ten Roman Catholics; two organized churches—one Methodist and one Presbyterian; two Methodist preachers, one Cumberland Presbyterian and one Baptist preacher; one Sabbath school, one week day school, thirty-five mechanics, four lawyers, six doctors, six inns, nine stores, nine groceries, one billiard table, six faro banks, twenty gamblers, two silversmith shops, two printing offices and two tailor shops."

It now became important that a city government should be established. Congress being in session passed an act incorporating the city of Austin, and on the thirteenth of January, 1840, an election under the charter was held for city officers, resulting in the selection of Judge Waller as mayor, under whose administration the city continued to prosper. The duties of his office, however, were not very onerous; the principal police duty to be performed was to keep the Indians out of the city at night, which was done with a tolerable degree of success.

On the same day on which the election was held, the Supreme Court for the first time met in the city, of which Thomas J. Rusk was Chief Justice, and James M. Robinson, John T. Mills, William J. Jones and Anthony B. Shelby were Associate Justices; William Fairfax Gray, Clerk; and Preston Conlee was Sheriff, and after a session of thirteen days, adjourned. At the following session, in 1841, Judge Rusk having retired from the bench, Judge John Hemphill became Chief Justice, and on the twentieth of January, 1841, the office of Clerk being declared vacant, Gen. Thomas Green was elected, and continued in the position until the breaking out of the war, in which he took an active and prominent part in behalf of the South. He was first a Colonel in the Sibley Brigade, and afterwards a Brigadier General under Gen. E. Kirby Smith. As the favorite son of the city of Austin, his acts were regarded with more than ordinary interest by its citizens. His reputation as a soldier had been established at San Jacinto and Monterey, and in this war it was believed that his every act would but tend to add new luster to it. At the gunboat fight at Blair's Landing, on Red River, he was killed and news of his death cast a solemn gloom over the city of Austin, in fact over the whole State. He was a man that any country might well be proud of. As soldier he was brave, as a civil officer he was capable, honest and faithful, as a husband and parent he was kind, affectionate and devoted. The writer has somewhat digressed, but feels that is in not entirely out of place of offer here this small tribute to the memory of one so universally beloved.

The new city was improving very rapidly, notwithstanding the many disadvantages it had to be contend with, and promised are long to "become famous among the cities of the New World." The independence of Texas has been acknowledged by the United, France and England, and M. de Saligny, the French Minister, was residing at Austin, and had erected near the city, one of the finest residences then in Texas (the one at present occupied by the family of Dr. J. W. Robertson) and perhaps he might have remained, but for an unfortunate difficulty between himself and Mr. Bullock, the principal hotel keeper in the city. It appears that Mr. Bullock's pigs were in the habit of running around M. de Saligny's stable, and some of them were killed by one of the servants of the French Minister, whereupon Mr. Bullock whipped the servant. The Minister got mad and called upon Mr. Bullock about the matter, who, not being entirely in a good humor, ordered him off the premises in language perhaps not the most polite. The Minister, feeling that France was insulted, called upon the President and demanded the immediate punishment of Mr. Bullock, which he declined to accede to, but turned him over to the civil authorities. This did not appease the anger of the Minister by any manner of means, and he conducted himself in such manner s to induce the President to ask that he be recalled, which was done. This, apparently, was a small matter, but it produced great results. It prevented the Republic from obtaining what is commonly known as the French Loan, for which negotiations were then pending, and has she been successful would have been the ruin of the young Republic.

On the first Monday in September, 1841, the general election was held. Gen. Houston, David G. Burnet and Governor Welsh, whom the old citizens of Austin so well remember, were candidates for President. Governor W., taking into consideration the low state of the finances of the Republic, proposed in his circular to perform all the duties of the office for the sum of five hundred dollars per annum, pay his own expenses, and do all of the public blacksmithing free of charge. This liberal offer, however, was rejected by the people, and Gen. Houston was triumphantly elected, and duly inaugurated on the second Monday of December following, being the first and last President ever inaugurated at the new capitol.

Early in the month of March, 1842, the Mexican forces under Gen. Vasquez made an incursion into Texas, which was promptly met by the people and driven back. The President deeming the archives in danger, felt it his duty, under the provisions of the Constitution to order their removal, as well as the heads of department, to a place of safety, the city of Houston being designated as that place. This was the commencement of what is known as the "Archive War," the result of which has been the location of the seat of government at the city of Austin up to the present time. The gallant citizens (and all that could be spared joined the expedition) who but a short time before, with buoyant spirits, had marched forth to meet the invaders of their country, leaving behind them a growing and prosperous city, returned victorious to a deserted village. The citizens were exasperated, and had good cause to be. They thought the President was acting in bad faith with them. They had expended for city lots over a half million dollars, had built their homes upon them, and felt secure under the protection of the strong arm of the government, but this had been taken away from them. The President was urged to come back, but without avail. The citizens then determined to take the matter into their own hands. On the removal by the President, the archives of the General Land Office were left behind. These the people determined to keep, in order that at least one portion of the government should remain in Austin. The President insisted that they also should be removed, and sent up for them, but without success. The young men of the city in order to show their contempt for the President, went so far as to shave the manes and tails of the horses of two of the commissioners sent up, who did not relish the joke very much at the time, but soon got over it, and afterwards became prominent citizens of Austin. The President, seeing that he could not obtain the Land Office archives peaceably, determined to have them by force. He, therefore, sent up an armed force of twenty or thirty men, with instructions to take them at all hazards. They arrived on the morning of the twenty-ninth of December, 1842, drove their wagons to the Land Office building, and had commenced loading before the citizens found out what was going on. Then the excitement really began, and the citizens armed themselves and assembled. They brought out their artillery, planted it so as to bear upon the wagons, charged it with grape and canister, and waited for the signal to fire. The wagons by this time were loaded, and about starting, when the signal was given and off went the cannon, several shot taking effect on the Land Office, but fortunately doing no other harm. As to who touched the cannon off has never been definitely settled, but it was generally conceded that it was done by Mrs. Eberly, a worthy and respected citizen, and at the time proprietress of the Eberly House, the same one now occupied by Col. C. K. Hall. The wagons, with their escort, went out of the city in double quick time. The citizens, as soon as possible, formed themselves into a company under the command of Mark B. Lewis, and pursued them, and during the night overtook them encamped on Brushy Creek. Their camp was surrounded, and shortly afterwards negotiations opened. The citizens demanded that the archives should be taken back to Austin, which was agreed to. The next morning early the wagons were turned back, and on their arrival in Austin the archives were placed in Mrs. Eberly's house, where they remained until the Land Office was opened, the President making no further attempt to take them away.

The Indians now became very troublesome, and more bold than ever before. Jno. Wahrenberger, a worthy citizen of Austin, but now deceased, in front of and near there the south gate of the Capitol now stands, was attacked and wounded by two Indians concealed in a thicket, and would have been killed but for the timely interposition of Col. Louis P. Cooke. Shortly afterwards, near where the residence of Mr. John Bremond now stands, three children of Mrs. Simpson were captured in broad daylight—one of the girls, however, made her escape; the other two, a girl and a boy, were taken off. The citizens pursued the Indians, and on the second day found the girl murdered and scalped, the boy was recovered a year or two afterwards. The Indians were prowling in and around Austin nearly all the time, and continued to do so until after annexation. Under all these disadvantages it was not to be expected that Austin would improve much, but the citizens had an abiding faith that sooner or later the government would be moved back. None were they disappointed.

Annexation took place, and President Jones ordered the Convention that was to make a State Constitution, to assemble at Austin on the fourth day of July, 1845. It assembled there, and Austin was again the capital. The Constitution provided for an election for a seat of government for twenty years, to take place on the first Monday in March, 1850. Up to that time little progress has been made by way of improvement, although the city gradually increased in population. The election took place. Tehuacana, Huntsville, Washington, and several other towns appeared in the field as rival candidates, but Austin had the advantage of all of them, from the fact that she had all the public buildings necessary for government purpose already erected, and that all the vacant lots in the city were owned by the State, from the sale of which a sufficient amount could be realized to construct any other, without taxing the people. Consequently, she was elected by a very handsome majority. This was an election in which the city of Austin and Travis county were particularly interested, and the strength of both city and county was more thoroughly voted than it ever had been, before or since.

Things now began to brighten up. The Capital question was settled for twenty years. Town lots had greatly increased in value, population was rapidly increasing, improvements were going on in every portion of the city, churches and school houses were being built—even the State caught the spirit of improvement, and as soon as possible commenced the erection of substantial public buildings, and for the first time the citizens commenced erecting stone and brick houses both for residences and stores. The only drawback was the want of railroad transportation to the coast, but it was thought this could be obviated by the navigation of our beautiful Colorado. In 1846, or 1847, a steamboat made the trip to Austin, and a regular navigation company was organized to clean out the river. In 1851 another steamer made her appearance at Austin, and was expected to make regular trips. The Board of Aldermen passed an ordinance establishing a regular landing, regulation wharfage and fees of wharfmaster, etc. That was the last trip of the “Colorado Ranger,” or any other steamboat to Austin. It is predicted, however, that the Colorado river will yet be regularly navigated to Austin—it is hoped that the prediction may prove true.

The breaking out of the war was a complete check to all improvements, for a time, although quite a brisk trade was carried on with Mexico during the continuance. Austin furnished its full quota of men in the struggle, many of whom lost their lives. After the war had ended it was some time before our city could take a fresh start; in fact it did not improve very materially until it became certain that a railroad would reach it, when a new spirit took possession of our people, and real estate went up to almost fabulous prices. Buildings of a most substantial character commenced going up in every portion of the city, and a population of about three thousand has, in the course of a few years, increased to upwards of ten thousand—and to-day Austin is one of the most flourishing and prosperous cities in the State. She has now six newspapers, one published daily, two tri-weekly, and three weekly, all of which are ably edited and well sustained; there are nine churches, all of which save one, are good substantial brick or stone buildings; there are seventeen schools in successful operation, ten of which are private and seven free schools, have in the aggregate about fifteen hundred pupils; just outside the city limits is the Texas Military Institute, an institution that Austin is justly proud of and one which bids fair, at no distant day, to rival any in the whole country.

The Constitution of 1869 provides that at the first general election, after its acceptance by the Congress of the United States, a vote shall be taken to permanently locate the seat of government. This election will be held in November next, when the people will be called upon to decide between Austin, Waco, Houston, and probably other places, but as Austin possesses so many advantages over every other place in the State, it is confidently believed that the seat of government will be retained where it is by a large majority, and then ere long she will become, if she is not already, "famous among the cities of the New World."

In taking a retrospective glance, we find that out of chaos a comparatively populous and flourishing city has grown up. Nature has been more lavish in the disposition of its embellishments than art. The State buildings, consisting of a Capitol, Land Office, Comptroller's and Treasurer's Department, Supreme Court Room and Governor's Mansion, are substantial and ornamental buildings. The county buildings, however, consisting of a Court House and Jail, are a disgrace to the county, and as long as they stand will cause the blush of shame to mantle the cheek of every citizen of Travis county when reminded of their existence. The City Hall and Market House answer the purpose very well, but there is room for improvement, which doubtless will be speedily made. The fire department of Austin, consisting of one steam fire engine, and one hand engine and two hook and ladder companies, is an honor to the city; on every occasion where their services have been called into requisition, they have most nobly performed their whole duty. The Lunatic, Blind, and Deaf and Dumb Asylums are institutions that are now in successful operation, and reflect credit upon the State.

Of the old citizens of Austin there are but few remaining. Col. Thos. Wm. Ward, Judge Lee, Edward Seiders, Louis Horst, James H. Raymond, George Hancock, A. B. McGill, Anderson Harrell, Dr. S. G. Haynie, and perhaps a few others, are still among us—may they long remain to witness the growing prosperity of a city that they have done so much to establish.
